U.S. advertiser proposal | Switch Audio

Two modes. One standard.

A proposed U.S. campaign for fictional Switch Audio

Proposed campaign for a fictional audio brand.
One product moves between a morning call and an evening workout.
Ohtani's participation is subject to athlete, brand and rights clearance.
Customer relevance and incremental contribution determine whether we scale.

U.S. activation | start with something documented

Personal partnerships have supported concrete U.S. activity.

- New Balance announced a 2024 Fort Worth pop-up for Ohtani's signature collection.
- The pop-up offered access 24 hours before the announced launch.
- Topps announced a global card agreement that includes U.S.-based products.
- These announcements disclose neither campaign profit nor available audio rights.

Buyer and product | test the connection

Can one pair earn both everyday jobs?

- Proposed audience: U.S. adults considering audio for work and exercise.
- Verify call clarity and secure fit before making product claims.
- Test whether viewers understand both uses and remember the brand.
- Measure spokesperson credibility separately from celebrity recognition.

One film | thirty seconds

The product stays in frame when the setting changes.

Creative test | agree the standard first

Recognition is the first question, not the final result.

- Compare product-only, Ohtani-led and another spokesperson's ads.
- Use comparable U.S. prospective buyers, exposure and media conditions.
- Primary creative measures: product-benefit comprehension and brand recall.
- Pre-agree thresholds, sample size and cost limits before reviewing results.

Sample budget | explicitly invented

A $5m scenario makes the commercial hurdle visible.

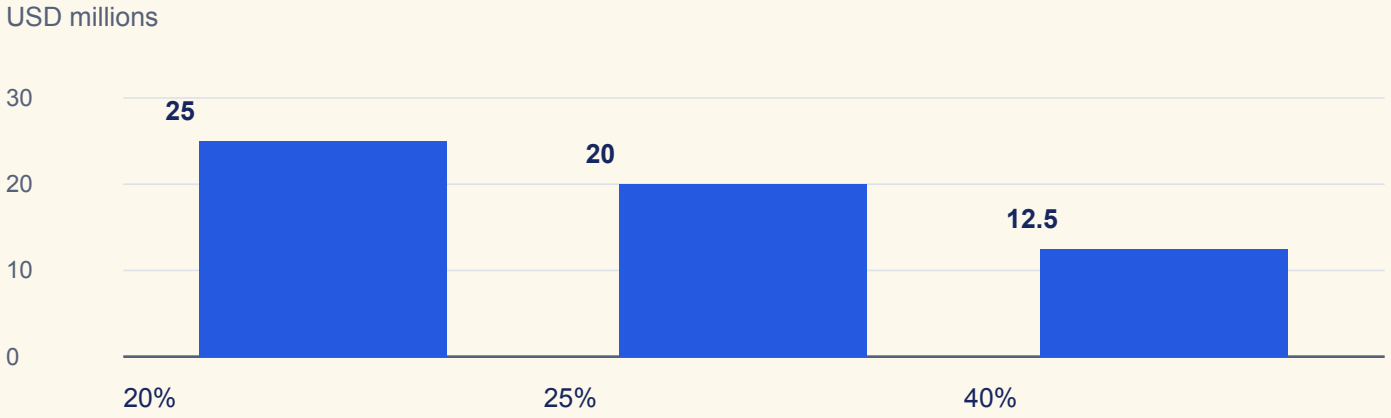

- Invented rights fee: $3m for a one-year U.S. campaign.
- Invented media, creative and activation cost: $2m.
- Total hypothetical campaign cost: $5m.
- These are teaching assumptions, not Ohtani's rate, a quote or an approved budget.

Invented teaching scenario. Not a quote, forecast or guaranteed return.

Incrementality | contribution pays campaign costs

At a 25% margin, the scenario needs $20m extra net sales.

Hypothetical breakeven incremental U.S. net sales

- Invented $5m campaign cost. At 25% contribution margin, breakeven requires $20m incremental U.S. net sales.
- Estimate incrementality using a holdout. Subtract variable costs in margin; results are neither forecasts nor guaranteed returns.

Invented $5m total campaign cost. Contribution margins are assumptions.

Launch gates | clear the rights, then earn the scale

Approve a test; make launch conditional.

- Verify category, U.S. territory, term, channels and existing exclusivity.
- Clear athlete approval, product claims and any club or league assets.
- Use audience and contribution evidence to decide spending.
- Reconcile repeat purchase, cannibalization and spillover within a defined horizon.
